Re: Tong Ren Therapy

Dear Doctor,

Your patient trusts your opinion, and appreciates the care you are providing. He/she is very concerned about their illness, and wants you to know that they are adding a harmless experimental therapy to your prescribed treatment. Because of the gravity of their condition, they are weighing the risks and benefits of all traditional and complementary modalities, and would appreciate your consideration of this noninvasive and inexpensive augmentation to their management.

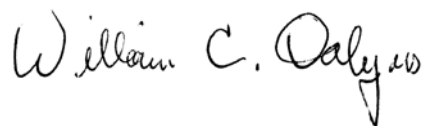

We all acknowledge that medical science is imperfect, and we have numerous "incurable" illnesses. There is a nascent therapy called Tong Ren which is a combination of Western medical science with Eastern insights. It emphasizes the need for stress reduction, and adds the concepts of bioelectricity and of synchronization with healthy patterns. Please see the attached "Overview of Tong Ren Therapy".

Tong Ren is a Complementary therapy, which offers a new approach to treating terminal diagnoses and some debilitating illnesses. It can augment healing, but does not replace or delay conventional treatment. Tong Ren practitioners do not practice medicine; they do not diagnose, prescribe, or interfere with traditional medical advice.

We are developing scientific evidence that Tong Ren has improved or solved some previously "incurable" conditions, such as refractory cancers and neurologic conditions such as amyotrophic lateral sclerosis. There are already thousands of anecdotal reports of such improvements, including my own mother's 'untreatable' metastatic cancer.

Thank you for taking the time to read this, and for giving some consideration to "thinking outside the box". When we physicians or our family members are faced with serious illness, we judge therapies on their merit, whether they are traditional or not. We tend to 'go the extra mile' and find treatments that offer the most benefit while doing the least harm. For many people, Tong Ren has solved their problem.

Sincerely,

Overview of Tong Ren Therapy

Tong Ren Therapy is a powerful and exciting form of energy healing. It has been developed over the last 25 years by TCM practitioner Tom Tam, combining the science of Western medicine with the wisdom of ancient Eastern knowledge and insights. The practice of Tong Ren is spreading rapidly, and it is now available in at least 40 of the United States, and at least 8 countries. Its popularity is driven by its success at curing or controlling various cancers and other debilitating conditions that have not responded to traditional Western medicine or to other forms of energy healing alone. A study was recently published by doctors at the Virginia Commonwealth University School of Medicine and the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute (a Harvard Medical School affiliate), evaluating the effect of Tong Ren on 265 patients at 7 different sites in Massachusetts and Connecticut with cancer, autoimmune, endocrine, musculoskeletal and other disorders. 89% of patients responded positively to the Tong Ren Therapy, including cures of numerous cancers and other serious illnesses. Please take a moment to review The Tong Ren Healing Method: A Survey Study – AM Sullivan, S Bauer-Wu, M Miovic - Complementary Health Practice Review, 2008, <http://chp.sagepub.com/cgi/content/abstract/14/1/19>. Additional studies to evaluate the effectiveness of Tong Ren are pending.

Tong Ren can achieve extraordinary healing by combining complementary elements of Eastern and Western medicine. Eastern medicine has long held that the body has a natural tendency to heal. Each organ is kept healthy by the natural flow of Chi energy, and interruption or blockage of that necessary bioelectric signal leads to disease. Western science brings improved understanding of anatomy, physiology and neurology, and has developed study designs and statistical analysis to assess the effectiveness of treatment modalities, but has concentrated on biochemistry and cell function, largely ignoring bioelectricity. As noted by Dr. Carl Jung, East and West have fundamentally contradictory but complementary understandings of the body, of the mind and of healing, and neither is adequate alone. Both are necessary components in a healing system for many difficult health problems... the marriage of Chi energy and Quantum Physics.

But Tong Ren is not simply the sum of two sciences. Its healing power grows an additional quantum leap by harnessing another natural tendency we have all observed in nature: harmony. The perfectly synchronized movements of birds flying in a flock, or fish swimming in a school are not coordinated by the usual senses of sight, sound, smell, feel or taste -- but rather by "brainwave entrainment". The human brain has a Frequency Following Response, tending to change its dominant electroencephalogram patterns toward the frequency of external stimuli. A natural propensity toward gradual synchronization is even seen in non-biologic systems, such as two pendulum clocks side-by-side on a wall. Tong Ren Therapy utilizes this natural tendency toward Harmony to bring diseased organs back into synchrony with the healthy bioelectrical patterns of Tong Ren practitioners, and even more importantly into entrainment with the larger and more powerful Collective Unconsciousness.

Dr. Carl Jung, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, and more recently Gary Zukav and others have described the evolving development of a sphere of Collective Unconsciousness. As an anthropologist, Teilhard traced the natural evolution of life on earth from the development of cells, then plants, through animal and finally human form. This visible biologic evolution then progressed to internal intellectual development, and now finally to globally evolving organization on the level of spirit-energy or the Collective Unconsciousness. We are all part of this upward spiral of organization, regardless of our awareness. In Tong Ren Therapy we tap into this vast reserve of healthy bioelectrical patterns and health-sustaining energy. The identity of the individual practitioner is immaterial, because the healing power does not come from that practitioner, but rather from the collectively evolving milieu.

Tong Ren practitioners use an acupuncture figurine as a tool. They apply energy to particular points on this anatomic model with a small magnetic hammer or other methods. They focus their conscious mind on physical locations on the figurine to corresponding locations on the patient, where blockages have stopped the normal flow of nurturing Chi energy. This rhythmic and habitual tapping produces a connection between the subconscious of the practitioner and the corresponding locations on the patient's body, to "break down or open the blockages". The subconscious connection allows entrainment of the diseased organ back to the healthy bioelectrical signals and the vast healing energy of the larger Collective Unconsciousness. This occurs with no physical contact, and even works with patients at a distance. Health is usually restored, if the conscious mind does not interfere.

Imagine the Tong Ren practitioner as a piano tuner. The tuner's hammer strikes piano wires of errant pitch, so they may be adjusted back into harmony with a series of tuning forks, each producing a complex and healthy collective waveform. The actual retensioning of the cords is accomplished not by the individual tapper, but by an unseen Assembly of Maestros. The accepting recipient feels energetic change, and then medical tests usually improve.

Most Tong Ren practitioners have themselves been healed, or have healed loved ones in this manner. Such healing is a powerful yet humbling experience. Practitioners happily welcome people with illnesses incurable by traditional Western or Eastern medicine. They simply act as a conduit to the healing patterns and power of the Collective Unconsciousness. They are rewarded by the joy and comfort of the healed.

Tom Tam is a healer, acupuncturist, Chi Gong and Tai Chi master, writer and poet living in Boston, Massachusetts. Tom has used Tong Ren to heal thousands of patients, and has trained hundreds of practitioners who are sharing this healing method around the world. Tong Ren is a Complementary therapy, rather than an alternative to traditional medical care. Tong Ren practitioners depend on the patient's physician to diagnose the cause of an illness. They do not practice medicine; they do not diagnose, prescribe, interfere with traditional medical advice, or promise a cure. They DO invite each patient to synchrony with healthy collective patterns and energy, and thereby restore health by curing or stabilizing an ailment. Tong Ren Therapy opens new horizons for medical professionals and other healers, and for anyone hoping to return to health.
